A library database is an electronic catalog or index, often contains information about published items, and is searchable.

The WVU databases page is primarily arranged by subject.
Use Databases to Search for Articles

• Try EBSCOHost databases (shown on next slide)

• Google Scholar (found on Databases List)

• PubMed

• Use Related Citations links for more articles

• Use Find it @ WVU to link to the article
• Academic Search Complete
  (excellent for full-text articles)

• Alt HealthWatch
  (complementary & alternative medicine)

• CINAHL with Full-Text
  (Cumulated Index of Nursing and Allied Health Literature)

• ERIC
  (Education)

• Health Source
  (Consumer Edition & Nursing/Academic Edition)

• MEDLINE
  (same database as PubMed)

• PsycINFO
  (good for fear of dental treatment)
Search for eating habits AND dental caries using Academic Search Complete and CINAHL

  - Scientific articles
  - Access using E-Journals tab on main search box: http://lib.wvu.edu
Why evaluate web sources?

• Anyone with a little time, some knowledge and small amount of money can publish on the Internet.

• No person, persons or organization reviews the content of the Internet.

• Pages are retrieved by search engines based on the page's content, or sometimes the quantity of page views, not the relevancy or quality of the page.

• Much information on the Web is not updated regularly.
Evaluating Websites

• CRAAP Test

  • Currency: timeliness of the information

  • Relevance: importance of the information for your needs

  • Authority: source of the information

  • Accuracy: reliability, truthfulness, and correctness of content

  • Purpose: the reason the information exists
